What makes a high-quality ergonomic chair different?

Headrest

The headrest is used to relax the muscles surrounding the cervical spine.

Backrest + lumbar support adjustment

Correct adjustment of the lumbar support supports the most bended part of your spine and thus it gets into the natural double S-shaped curve. Prevents slouching.

Armrests

Correctly adjusted armrests help relax muscles surrounding the cervical spine, shoulders and upper back. It is important to prevent tension when working in a rigid position.

Seat

The front edge with sufficient rounding to prevent the compression of vessels and helps blood circulation to the limbs. For correct sitting it is necessary to use the entire area of seat.

Mechanism

Synchronous mechanism allows to adjust seat and backrest at the correct angle and support dynamic sitting.
